Title: Operationalizing self-determination through a community REB

The Manitoulin Anishinaabek Research Review Committee (MARRC) serves seven First Nation communities on Manitoulin Island. Fed up with unethical research practices, community members gathered to develop Guidelines for Ethical Aboriginal Research. For the past 20 years, the committee has quietly advocated for self-determination in research through ethics reviews, capacity building, policy development, and community research gatherings. This presentation will describe what self-determination in research looks like in practice.
